The Rastern Budget publishes the following letter from its Vienna'correspondent:

The exchange of thanks and assurances of friendship between St. Petersburg and Versallice, secompanied as it was by an insinnation plainly directed against Austris, has done much to confirm the helief of some politicals here that Count Bismack's friendly overtures to the latter power were a mere blind, lotended chiefly as a diplomatical produced by the extraordinary efforts made by France after Sedan. If this view is correct, the conclusion of the preliminaries of peace was obviously the right moment for thicking off the mask. Of course, this "diplomatic victory" has made a most unpleasant impression on all political circles here, both high and low; and the philo Fransian procession on all political circles here, both high and low; and the philo Fransian procession of all this must be a speedy change in the internal policy of Austria. The need of peace is so universal that even hard work from the greatest European potentates can hardly lead to complications, and Austrian diplomacy will probably not find occasion to abandon its present atitude of receive for some time to come. But the demonstrations of friendship Russian and German emperors cannot fall to produce a marked effect on home affairs, for the eagerness which they show to advance the laterests of their respective empires is a serious serious warning to the discontented Austrian nationalities that their very existence will be in danger if they do not speedly take some steps for protecting themselves. The tone of the speech of WILLIAM I., Emperor of Germany, at the opening of the first German Reichstag, or Parliament, in which the South-German States were represented, is surprisingly modest and is devoid of the vainglorious boasting which might be expected from a conceited and rible butcheries which deluged the soil of France with blood, and he calls down the blessing of the Almighty on the structure he, or rather his cunning minister, has built up by so many acts of horror and cruelty. But while he is thus piously com-menting on his recent victory, he says "Independent Germany respects the independence of others. The fiery ordeal of war through which we have passed is a reliable guarantee of European peace." This reminds us of the famous saying of This reminds us of the famous saying of Napoleon III. at Bordeaux, shortly after he had restored the empire: "I' Empire, c'est la paix!" raine, which now belong to Germany, have also left the Assembly, and including those that have left from other causes more than although the French Parliament thus bears a decidedly rural character, and the provinces have an immense majority, we can notice a certain dread of the Psrisians in all their movements. They have always, as it were, been under the guar-dianship of the inhabitants of the metropo-lis, and are afraid to assert their rights in face of the brutal and insane mob that nov holds the city of Paris in subjection THIERS, the head of the government, i atraid to give the least offense to the rufflans, who on their part do not show the alightest compunction, and the chief ex-ecutive of France has put the whole matter into the hands of the Assembly. But even this body, which represents rural France, seems inclined to temporize with the insurgents, and is afraid to proceed to energetic measures against the rebellion city. We should, indeed, be sorry if the provincial delegates of France should prove the assertion of the Parislans, that Paris is the brain of France, and that the other parts of the country only obey the impulses they receive through it, to be true. That would forebode anything but good for France, for this so-called

The new party has broken ont in a new appl. The member pasis. It little sentionan, "whose smile it was childfuler and bland," has been traveling up and down the country, dining in New York, whether is washington, and launching in new York, whether is washington, and launching innederbolts at the White House from Chasgo, all to demonstrate the whereabouts and whatabouts of the new party. But, since the solitary galwante apasm in New York last winter, the new party has been something less than a name to conjure by. "We can call spirits from the vasty deep," said the new-party wet nurses at Deimonico's; but the spirits most "perversety did not come when called.

But now, like an electrical flash ont of a clear sky; like a selbestial phenomenon which actence has not promoteriseted; like sunbeams colone has not promoteriseted; like sunbeams of the sunbeams, a number of them prominent in the party!"

the telegraph. The spectacle was wincessed, in point of fact was assisted, by no loss than a formidable array of "a dozen or fifteen Republicans, a number of them promisens in the party?"

Ever since the famous dejenner at Delmonicols, two notable circumstances have ever applied in connection with the new party? Ist, That it is a select party Ist, That it is a select party Ist, That it is a select party Ist, That the defendence of the connection with the new party Ist, That it is a select party Ist, That the voters. From which the public will be enabled to precise the generous impulses of the desen or fifteen promeant. Republicans who attended the new party outbreak in Cincinnati.

The dozen or fifteen proceeded to organize the new party upon a platform of precisely four planks, which gives just one plank to every section of the new party consisting of 3% prominent Republicans. But the most remarkable fact is, that every plank is borrowed or stolen from the Democraty. The first is a persons concerned in the endelling the persons of Government patronage, which seeds only that Federal bayonets be added to make it thoroughly Democratic. The fourth condemns an irredeemable shimplaster curbard-money system.

Now, as every one of these propositions merely asserts a well-known such long-standing doctrine of the Democratic party, and as the language in which they are spread upon the record by the dozen or fifteen Cincinnation organizers of the new party expresses not a single sectiment in which Democratic of the personate of the personat

A Daring Female Flaunts an Orange Fing.

[From the New York Herald.]

Ellen Pillow lives in Thirteenth street, near avenue A. She is an enthusastic admirer of the Frince of Orange. Last Friday she had the orange flag hanging out of her window and floating defiabily on the Patrick's day be a street of the property of the Prince of Orange. Last Friday she had the orange flag hanging out of her window and floating defiabily on the Patrick's day around her door, gesticulating futbushy and calling on her in unmistakable toues to take in the hated emblem, or ner life would not be safe. The bold Ellen shouted back "no surrender." "I'll never take in the color my father fought and died for!" but rained down on their devoted heads a shower of flower pois and other crockery. The control of the shows a shower of flower pois and other crockery. The control of the control of the property of the day proceeding, she saccumbed to the influence of too much stimulant, and officer Couway sacceeded in arresting the heroic Amazon. She was brought before Justice Scott, at the Fasex Market Police Court, about half-past three in the afternoon, defiant sill, and boldly declaiming hor "Judge," said Ellen, "Um an Orangewoman. My principles are no surrender, that sill the Fennan may go to the bottomless pit. I renounce all popes and popery; all nuns and brinnery; all munks and monkery. I defy Fenians and Fenianism. They can never conquer me I'm an Orangeman's daughter, and I'm English descent."

Elleu was committed to allow her to regain her equanimity.

other woman in his presence. He was developed into a therough missathrope, with a peculiar mania against the female sex generally, both brute and human.

These facts the writer got from a friend a few months ago, as he was riding by the hermit's cabin, and, being deeply impressed with the character of the singular subj ct, suggested that we should ride by and interview the womanhater. "First ascertain," said he, "the sex of the animal you ride. If it is a female, Quissenberry would go into hysterics on the discovery. He would burn the gate you rode through, the tree you bitched te, and almost dig up and haul away the very soil you rode over in his inclosure." Finding we were aback of one of the distranchised animals it was with considerable disappointment we were compelled to forego an interview. He had sought this most secluded apot of the family lands to build his cabin. His bair and beard grow in wild protusion: be make his own garments, which hang loosely and awkwardiy about bim, tills his own corn and notatopatch, grinds his meal on a had-mill, does his own cooking, washing, sewing, &o., and steals out but once a month, at night, to garner up such things as he is indebted to the outside world for, and beyond this will admit of no intercourse with men. As to whether he conceived his aversion to "the sex" from a lilling he received in Texas, or elsewhere, he has never solven. In fact he has not been heard to socak a dozen words in as many years. "Look there," said our friend, "do you see that fence-panel entirely gone? Well, a few days since a negro woman passing through the neighboring farms, crossed Quissenberr's fence, and he burnt every rail of the panel she climbed over. He will have nothing female about him. Mares, cows, hene, pigs, everything, in fact, that is cursed with "the female form divine," throws him into a perfect state of frensy.

I have mentioned these matters simply to show that hotels built and conducted on a great scale are amongst the best investments which earlies are amongst the best investments which earlies are amongst the test investments which earlies are make in these times. We saw this, my father sind myself, from our beginning at Albany, and when we built at Lake George, such a thing, for example, as a long, twenty-dive feet wide, and thirty-five feet high, we were not overdoing the matter, it takes three hundred and twenty-five servants to keep that house running, and the srchitect of it, as well as John Bridgort, the srchitect of the State capitol at Albany, have as much as they can do planning huge hotels, somewhat on the scale of ours. Even at the Arlington Hotel has been useful here as showing what Washington might maintain, but this city ought to have a house to hold at least nine hundred persons. We have suggested to the persons who have been after us, showing what Washington might maintain, but this city ought to have a house to hold at least nine hundred persons.
